WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1889. ANNOUNCEMENT.

To the Patrons and Friends of THE CITIZENG

It is necessary to say to you that since the first issue of this paper, now one year ago, I have been unable to come to an understanding with its principal stockholders as to our respective interests in the business, and in consequence this will be its last issue until some definite arrangement is perfected.

While I hope this may be in time for its resumption on January 1, candor compels me to say that what I have not been able to accomplish in a year can scarcely be expected in a week.

As this may, then, be the final issue, it is appropriate and only just to myself and others who have faithfully labored through the past twelvementh, to say a few words of the results which have been accomplished.

In the first place, I wish to assure those who have made advance payments on subscriptions and advertisements, that 1 declare myself personally responsible to see that unless this paper is resumed within one week they shall be reimbursed such proportion of their money as has not been earned according to contract The same I say to all other creditors: their claims will be met promptly at maturity. This same spirit I expect to in fluence all who are indebted to this company, and that settlements will be made punctually, as gentlemen always deli-

BIOGRAPHY OF MR. GRADY. The death of no journalist anywhere in the United States has ever created a profounder sensation. There was genuine sorrow at the premature loss of a man so admirable personally, and so gifted intellectually. There is a feeling Measured by years, his trial was a brief one; measured by results, he had accomplished already what no journalist, no orator, had ever attained, with exceptions so rare that they scarcely present themselves in comparison; and he had effected what none other had done in the troublous times since the war, gained patient, candid, willing hearing in a section where candid presentation of a distrusted section were rebuke akin Shoes and Clothing. to insult. Those were noble sentiments uttered by the men of Boston. In time they may be the voice of the whole North. When men of each section believe and trust each other, then comes all and complete pacification of all mis-

nderstanding We present the following outline of Mr. rady's career:

Hon. Henry Woodfin Grady, says the Chattagooga Times, was born in Athens. Ga., in 1851. During his boyhood be enjoyed the best educational advantages, but the four years of the civil war serionsly interrupted his studies, and much of his time was spent in visiting the vari-us points where his father, Col. Grady.

When peace came it found the lad atherless, Col. Grady having fallen in battle while leading his men in a desper-ite charge. Young Grady found that he and no time to lose equipping himself or his coreer. After graduating at the State University he went to the University of Virginia, where he took a post graduate course. He was, during his term in each of these institutions, the oungest student in attendance. He unded diligently such studies as suited is bent, and paid but little attention to studies in which he felt no interest, distory, belies letters, Anglo-Saxon and Greek attracted him, and his standing was very high in all of these.

From the first his command of language was remarkable. His pen transerred his thoughts to paper in graphic and growing phrases with lighting like rapidity and his ready, magnetic style of speaking won for him the name of the "Silver-Tongued Orator." In the literary societies of the two universities he car-ried off the highest honors as a speaker. DRIFTS INTO IOURNALISM.

While still a student, he wrote a letter to the Atlanta Constitution. It was printed and the editor was so much struck with the sparkle and dash of the communication, that he signified his de-sire to hear from the writer again. When sire to hear from the writer again. When the first press excursion after the war was tendered a ride over the "State kond," the editor telegraphed his boyish correspondent who had then returned to his borne in Athens, that he wished to maximum (Grady) represent the Consti-nation on the trip, and write up the monthly and a resources along the line
